The problem of peace: understanding the 'liberal peace ...

The liberal peace is theorised as a commitment to liberal values, norms and practices through; democratisation, rule of law, human rights, free markets, neo-liberal development (Richmond, 2006).

A Liberal Peace?: The Problems and Practices of Peacebuilding eBook: Campbell, Susanna, Chandler, Professor David, Sabaratnam, Meera: Amazon.in: Kindle Store

The construction of the liberal peace, and its associated discourses and practices in post-conflict environments is far from coherent. It is subject to significant intellectual and practical shortcomings, not least related to its focus on political, social, and economic reforms as mainly long-term institutional processes resting on the reform of governance.

The debate still revolves around a post-liberal peace, problems inherent in liberal peace and emancipatory, hybrid forms of peace. Gray (2007) argues that, in a “global crusade for human rights”, pre-emptive war would be used to create a new world order, which would lead to the rise of authoritarian regimes.

The other side focuses on liberal peace, seen as the solution to the problem of failing or failed states. Proponents of liberal peace have developed a system with instruments – usually categories, indices and warnings – to measure and rank states along a spectrum from strong/stable states (usually in the West) to quasi, weak, failing or failed states (usually not in the West).

The democratic peace theory posits that democracies are hesitant to engage in armed conflict with other identified democracies. Among proponents of the democratic peace theory, several factors are held as motivating peace between democratic states: Democratic leaders are forced to accept responsibility for war losses to a voting public;
