CHAPTER 2 The Intergenerational Transmission of Memory and Trauma: From Survivor Writing to Post-Holocaust Representation (pp. 41-66) The movement from survivor writing to second- and third-generation accounts of the Nazi genocide marks an important shift in the intergenerational transmission and expression of Holocaust memory, trauma, and representation.

Third-Generation Holocaust Representation: Trauma, History ... It is still open whether these deficits in declarative memory of trauma episodes are due to an original disturbance of verbal representation of trauma or due to intrusive, highly emotional, and sensation-based trauma memories that impair the actual process of retrieval (Brewin, 2007). These traumatic memories, particularly in the form of intrusive visual flashbacks, significantly differ from other types of autobiographical memories.

Project MUSE - Third-Generation Holocaust Representation

The authors in this volume explore the interconnected issues of intergenerational trauma and traumatic memory in societies with a history of collective violence across the globe. Each chapter's discussion offers a critical reflection on historical trauma and its repercussions, and how memory can be used as a basis for dialogue and transformation. The perspectives include, among others: the healing journey of three generations of a family of Holocaust survivors and their dialogue with third ...
