The Body Finder. —Justine Magazine Violet Ambrose is grappling with two major issues: Jay Heaton and her morbid secret ability. While the sixteen-year-old is confused by her new feelings for her best friend since childhood, she is more disturbed by her "power" to sense dead bodies—or at least those that have been murdered.

In Kimberly Derting's Dead Silence, Violet's life has taken a very violent turn. It was bad enough that Violet lived her life stumbling upon dead bodies, animal and otherwise, but when she was taken by a serial killer, her last resort was to kill him, leaving her with her own death echo connecting her to his life which she took.

Dead Silence (The Body Finder, #4) by Kimberly Derting

Violet hated the song that echoed around, and above, her. Hated this particular echo of the dead like she'd never hated any other before. Not because it wasn't beautiful or melodious or catchy. But because it was unending. A constant reminder of what she'd done. You're a killer . . . You're a killer . . . You're a killer . . . It never stopped.

Whatever the reason, I did not enjoy Desires of the Dead as much as The Body Finder and I did not enjoy The Last Echo as much as Desires of the Dead and I did not enjoy Dead Silence as much as The Last Echo. I know I should have gone back and reread the whole series, but "Aint nobody got time for that."
