Obligations erga omnes are international obligations owed by states to the international community as a whole. They are imposed by jus cogens, or peremptory norms of international law, such as the prohibition on genocide.

In international law, the concept of erga omnes obligations refers to specifically determined obligations that states have towards the international community as a whole. In general legal theory the concept " erga omnes" (Latin: 'in relation to everyone') has origins dating as far back as Roman law and is used to describe obligations or rights towards all.

An obligation erga omnes, in contrast, is one that is owed to the international community as a whole. The legal effect of such a characterisation is the generation of a procedural right of standing, on the part of all states, to invoke the responsibility of a state that is in breach of this obligation.

One of the characteristics of obligations erga omnes is their universality and non-reciprocity, i.e. they are obligations of a State "towards the international community as a whole", and all States have a legal interest in their observance. 45 These obligations "are grounded not in an exchange of rights and duties but in an adherence to a normative system". 46 Although the Chicago ...

In an obiter dictum in its 1970 judgment in the Barcelona Traction case, the International Court of Justice identified a category of international obligations called erga omnes, namely obligations owed by states to the international community as a whole, intended to protect and promote the basic values and common interests of all.

Should a State submit an application to the International Court of Justice in relation to the alleged breach of an obligation which is set out in the interest of all States or of all the State parties to a treaty (obligation erga omnes), there is an issue of the State's standing when it acts only in that interest. Another issue is whether the dispute then comes under the applicable jurisdictional clause or the parties' declarations of acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction.
