Most plastic dolls are made from vinyl, otherwise known as polyvinyl chloride (PVC). Major resin producers supply PVC compounds, which is the world's second largest selling thermoplastic behind polyethylene. The basic building block of PVC is vinyl chloride, which is converted to PVC by a suspension process.

Hard plastic dolls were made for a short period after the Second World War from a material based on cellulose acetate. The most prolific doll makers were Pedigree, Roddy, BND, Palitoy and Rosebud. Many companies tried different combinations of materials to achieve their desired effects.

"Plastic Doll" is the name of the matte pale pink shade of the limited-edition of "Stupid Love" eye-shadow palette, created in collaboration between Lady Gaga and "Haus Laboratories". All the palette shades are named after the song titles of her album "Chromatica".
