For this reason, age is a dimension of social stratification. The social-conflict approach claims that our industrial-capitalist economy creates an age-based hierarchy. As per Marxist thought, Steven Spitzer (1980) points out that a profit-oriented society devalues any category of people that is less productive.

Aging is a complex process, and the Continuity Theory explores these complexities to a greater extent than the other sociological theories, and within a holistic framework. Aspects of aging are studied in regards to their relation to other aspects of human life. It encourages young people to consider that their current behaviors are laying the ...

The sociology of aging (1985 edition) | Open Library

While aging itself is a biological process, what it means to be “young” or “old” is socially constructed. This means that there is no inherent cultural meaning to the biological process of aging. Rather, cultures imbue youth and age with meanings. Aging is perceived differently around the world, demonstrating its social construction.

The breadth of the field can be highlighted in several ways. First, the sociology of aging encompasses investigations of aging as a process, of older adults as a group, and of old age as a distinctive stage of the life course. Second, aging research is performed at multiple levels of analysis, from macro level studies of age structure within and across societies, to mesolevel studies of labor force participation and family structure, to micro level investigations of health and well-being.

Sociology of Aging

Sociology of Ageing. As we age, our lives change while changing the society too. In fact, society organizes our lives in patterned ways that correspond to being a child, an adolescent, an adult, and an older person. Ageing can be sociologically defined as the combination of biological, psychological and social processes that affect people, as they grow older.

Age is socially constructed because notions of age vary around the world. Different cultures fix age with different meanings and different values. Eastern cultures tend to highly value age and wisdom, while Western cultures tend to highly value youth. In Western societies, people take pains to appear younger than their biological age.
