The Virgin of Guadalupe reveals herself to Juan Diego. On December 9th, 1531, a decade after the downfall of Tenochtitlan and the beginnings of Spanish colonization, a man named Juan Diego (born Cuauhtlatoatzin) was walking across the Hill of Tepeyac near a razed shrine to the Mexica (Aztec) earth goddess Tonantzin when a woman appeared and spoke to him in Nahuatl, his native tongue.

Monterrey's government will "rescue" the image of Our Lady of Guadalupe made of steel that "reappeared" almost buried by rocks moved by the Santa Catarina flow during the heavy rainfall caused by hurricane Hanna last Sunday, July 26th. In 2010, another hurricane, "Alex," ripped off the base that held the religious image, at the river's [...]

The Virgin of Guadalupe is the Catholic title for the Virgin Mary, a religious icon to the Mexican people who is more than a version of the Mother of God: She is a national symbol. What many do not know is that this goddess who is revered and considered a Christian deity is actually the product of a cross between Christian mythology and an ancient Nahua goddess called Tonantzin.
